Fred Lockwood Has Very Short Memory

The following item, under City Hall notes, appeared in one of the San Diego dailies, last Friday:

* * *

" Prospects of a fishing pier at Ocean Beach are not as bright as they were several weeks ago, it was stated at the city hall. The SERA has declined to furnish the money and the council cannot see its way clear to spend $16,000 for pleasure purposes at this time, it is stated by Assistant City Manager Lockwood. Plans for the pier are ready. It was discovered that the work would have to be done by piledrivers and Lockwood said the SERA set-up here has made no provision for such work in its dispensation of relief funds. The council is inclined to wait until time to prepare the next budget, it was intimated today."

* * *

Apparently the council or city manager's office are again at their adept game of "passing the buck" for at the time our pier question was a live matter the SERA was anxious to cooperate with the city and freely offered them 5,000 bags of cement and all the unskilled labor that might be necessary to build a pier at Ocean Beach, as well as saying they would consider further favors. At that time City Manager Lockwood stated several times that it would not be feasable to ask SERA for help for they were too slow and the city could do better under straight contract. "The council is inclined to wait until time to prepare the next budget" which means close to a year's delay.

While not one member of the council came out against our plans when we appeared before the council some two months ago for a fishing pier, and at that time there was about $60,000 on hand in the unappropriated balance fund, yet it seemed each had a more desired project of his own, and by trading favors, Ocean Beach was left holding the empty bag, not an unusual happening.

SERVICE FAMILY HOPES TO RETURN HERE TO MAKE HOME

Mrs. Ralph Quainton and children expect to leave Ocean Beach about October 18 for Manila where they will join Mr. Quainton for the next two years. In April they expect to go to Shanghai and other parts of China where Mr. Quainton will be in the government service.

The Quaintons have traveled and seen a great deal of the world during his sixteen years in the service but tell us there is no better place in the world to live than right here at Ocean Beach, therefore, when the next four years have rolled by and Ralph Quainton comes out of the service on twenty year's retirement pay it is their plan to return here and build or buy themselves a home and become permanent residents.

The Royal Neighbors of America will give a dessert bridge at the Ocean Beach Woman's clubhouse, Thursday, October 18. The public is cordially invited.

TREES BEING WATERED

Starting last Saturday the ornamental trees around Ocean Beach are receiving their first copious watering for some months. Letters from Mrs. Mary Near, tree chairman of the Woman's club and from the chamber of commerce here received little attention until followed up by Chas. H. Daly who told the city council and city manager in no uncertain terms that they were neglecting sadly this part of their duty to the city.

LOCAL POLICE PICK UP SCREEN CUTTING BURGLAR

Radio car patrolmen Reynolds and Hall answered a call at 8:05 Tuesday evening sent in by A. W. Weyh of 3033 Freeman street, who had seen a man trying to enter his house thru a window. Searching the neighborhood they picked up John Coelho of 2904 Addison, who was identified by Weyh. The man still had the knife in his hand which plainly showed the screen marks, it is said.

This was a good pick up by the local policemen as possibly the man was just starting out on his night's expedition, and prompt answer to the alarm resulted in this man's arrest, who has already served a term for burglary, committed in July of 1932.

SINCLAIR MEETING

MUSINGS WHILE MEANDERING

(By Merrill Stuart)

"Blessed events" — thick and fast, despite depression; each event more blessed than the last—as if there would not be another and another! Well, if proud da-das and fond ma-mas didn't go ga-ga over babies, who would? They bring love with 'em. Love makes the world go 'round; so that's the answer.

Babies are national assets. They must carry on; if they aren't born, they can't carry on, that's sure. Parenthood duty to country —proclaims some countries. Certain employer offers bonus of $100 for every baby born to employe; double for twins; quintriplets would break his bank, I'd say.

This baby business no longer hushed hidden subject of smirke and significant whispers. Buzzing is right out loud, a general joyous secret. Parents crow over such an achievement and why not? An honest-to-goodness baby in the offing is something to crow over. Aren't all things natural lovely and of good report?

Baby question has many angles: The childless adopt baby—an adventure fraught with thrills; almost fills the bill—not quite . . . . . Famous author late in life cried, "I have no children!"; took to writing of dream children, spending his last days in their bright company; dream children do not grow old . . . . . Mother refusing acceptance of seventeenth baby . . . . . Birth control arguments waging ceaselessly; poor scrub woman against it; selfish silken in favor. "Better, braver breed, easing poverty," says eminent advocate. "Marry and beget children," say dictators. If pigs, cotton, wheat are cut down, why worry obout too many babies anyway? A brave emancipated soul declares, "I want a baby—where can I get one?" and goes out and gets one. Standards of world change, altho babies go on forever just the same.

Babies unwanted, abandoned, orphans illegitimate — sorrowful procession; tiny waifs doomed to travel an alarming road alone—life a lottery . . . . . Babies like radio, frigidaire, cookstove—on instalment plan; one hospital's method of collecting fees; parents get money's worth, too' when baby arrives it's paid for; things paid for are precious.

A gamble, this baby industry: Prizefighter's son champion heavyweight of tomorrow . . . . . weak handicapped infant one day celebrity, making parents famous . . . lusty one may become weakling and gangster . . . . . Two of a kind, three; shoes for quintriplets a problem. (By the way, I read that famous five are daily receiving rum—early supporters of repeal, what?)

What do babies think? Are they all alike I mused upon this in meandering about with eye to babies only. This wee weanling yelling lustily for sustenance—how does he know I'm not his mother?..... That pickaninny grasping spider dangling before it; born without fear, exploring everything within reach—until once hurt.....Whimpering papoose squirming with heat under avalanche of frills, fancy frock, embroidered blankets; nudist bambino kicking pink toes in air, gurgling in freedom and glee ..... sleeping atom breathing perfectly thru its 'ittle button nose—as only a baby can..... husky screaming lungs asunder; unloosed safety pin, tummy ache maybe—how can a baby tell?.....carriage left facing sun, within scowling wrinkled bit of humanity; weak eyes some day.....Little man shoving both fists in his mouth—then what?....and that whipper-snapper sticking out his tongue at me and regarding me with owlish stare in passing.

No, babies are all different; born without good manners. Alike only in their dependency, trustfulness, general adorableness. How defenseless they are and how altogether their mothers' very own! So few the years, too, before a baby learns to do without his mother. So short the time when she must yield her possessive love —and let her baby go its way.

Thus grinds on mill of motherhood—of blessed events there is no end.

Heigh-ho! Guess you'll have to figure out this baby proposition for yourselves after all!

School Auditorium and Class Rooms Ready Nov. 12

With a crew of nearly forty men working on it, the new Ocean Beach school building is rapidly approaching completion. It is planned to have the building finished by November 10 and to move classes into it during the week of November 12-16.

The building is to house the first and second grades and will be a model of primary school construction. In addition to the large classroom and cloakroom, each class will have a small workroom equipped with benches, tools and sink where activity work will take place.

In the building will be an auditorium seating three hundred twenty-five people. Many school projects are being planned to take advantage of the auditorium.

On the wall in the auditorium will hang an unusually fine painting, "A Maine Village" by Elbott Torrey. The painting was made under the PWA art project last year and selected by Mr. Reginald Poland, director of the Fine Arts Gallery, for hanging in the Ocean Beach school.

The strength of the construction even exceeds the new state earthquake requirements so residents are assured that their children will be perfectly safe from any earthquake which might come.

The L6 Civic League met at 2:30 Monday afternoon. A short play "Antonia Canova and the Statue" was given by the pupils and directed by Elizabeth Wisdom. Miss Mildred Henderson, director of cafeterias, told of "The Land of the Midnight Sun."

A sketching trip with Miss Lotta Perry, art supervisor, as director was enjoyed by L6 pupils Tuesday.

Mrs. Moon's L6-H5 grade is making a Natural History Museum. The children have brought many things connected with it. Each article in the exhibit is labeled.

The boys in Miss Engel's L5-H4 room are carving Egyptian Gods out of wood and are making crepe paper slaves to pull them, in connection with their project and social science work.

"Indians" is the subject in Miss Neal's L4 grade. The children are occupied during their activity period by building Indian huts.

Elizabeth Stover from the Washington school enrolled in L6 Monday.

Donna, Betty Ruth and Billy Gates, formerly of San Pedro have enrolled in the Ocean Beach school.

WOMAN'S CLUB TO MEET IN REGULAR SESSION OCT. 11

Mrs. D. H. Horner will be program chairman of the regular meeting to be held Thursday, October 11.

Mrs. Charles J. Leopold will give a talk on "Motion Pictures and the League of Decency." Piano solos by Mrs. Marion Frieze; presiding at tables Mesdames Olive Kline and Lee Stratton; hostesses, Mesdames L. B. Hayward and George B. Kenline.

Mrs. C. F. Near has been appointed new chairman of the tree planting committee for the ensuing year.

FREE TICKETS TO WASHINGTON STATE GAME AT L. A.

The Ocean Beach News has a couple of reserved seat tickets to Saturday's football game at the Coliseum in Los Angeles, between Washington State and Southern California.

Any subscriber may use these upon payment of the tax, 35c on both tickets. If you're going up, come and get them at the News office.

SAILOR'S CHOICE

Bury me out on the sea,
To be rocked by the roll of the waves
Where the croon of the echo shall cling to me
Of the boom from buried caves.
Leave me alone on the tide,
Letting me drift afar
To the purple shore of the Evermore,
Where the sunset harbors are.

In the clasp of the encircling rim
Of the ocean I love so well
Let me rest on its breast when the day is dim
And the twilight weaves its spell.
Lay me away in the West
When the waters are cool and calm;
When the kiss of the wave shall lave my grave
With a languorous, lingering balm.

As I lived so let me lie
In the ocean's enduring embrace,
When I come to die, and the lucent sky
Shall seem like a loving face
That will smile as I drift and dream
As the ages rise and fall,
On the tides of time, in a mystic chime—
The deep breathing of the All.

Rabies Turning Out To Be Menace Here

The report of the danger of rabies n dogs some two months ago was not a scare, but a reality, as has been the sad experience of a number of Ocean Beach citizens.

During the past month local police have treated the following for dog bite: Sept. 10, Mrs. T. E. Nihser of 1945 Venice street; Sept. 11, Jack A. Maddox, 4811 Santa Cruz; Sept. 23, Eugene Shepard, 2269 Ebers; Sept. 25, Pat Jones, 4610 Green St.; Oct. 3, Mina Hansen, 2360 Etiwanda.

A number of dogs have been picked up as fast as reported to the police or the Humane Society, the later holding for observation and during the year at the beach have had, we are told, six cases of rabies in dogs. Just a short time ago a Great Dane was picked up at foot of Muri avenue, proving to be in a dangerous condition. This dog it is said came down thru Mission Valley and left a trail of infected dogs along the way.

Some six months ago the B. E. Askew family of 2101 Cable street had their pup vaccinated and felt relieved of any danger from this source. Lately the dog has been acting sickly and was treated for worms. September 23 he was taken in to the Humane Society for treatment and after two days observation turned mad with the rabies, now the family is taking treatment, to ward off any danger from the disease neighbors also close to the Askew's are being similarly treated in order to be safe.

To those not familiar with this danger it is passed off lightly, but we urge people with dogs to realize there is great danger, small animals as well as large ones are liable to become infected, if they do so, and become at all cross or unruly they should be tied up or locked up for several weeks observation. It takes but a small puncture of the skin to transmit the disease to humans and if not treated promptly is often said to be fatal. The precaution is much better and cheaper than the treatment. The serum treatment it is said runs in the neighborhood of $100, sometimes more and sometimes a little less.

So you folks who have dogs, watch them closely, a scratch on the hand from an infected dog's tooth, or a bite on the leg, though seemingly only trivial, might prove fatal.

If your pet acts cross or unnatural keep it locked up until any danger might pass or call the Humane Society if you might be in doubt.

COUNTY FEDERATION OF WOMAN'S CLUBS HERE OCTOBER 18

The semi-annual convention, County Federation of Womens Clubs, will meet at Ocean Village, Thursday, October 18, at 10 a. m.

Luncheon will be served by the Ocean Beach Woman's club in their club rooms.

For reservations call Mrs. H. W. Jones, Hillcrest 8944-M.

KIWANIS MEMBERS HEAR PRELIMINARY EXPOSITION PLANS

Dick Barbour was chairman for the day at Wednesday's luncheon, having for his speaker R. S. Strong who spoke on the early plans of the California Pacific International Exposition for 1935.

Mr. Strong said that reliable authorities had estimmated 5,000,000 people would visit San Diego for the Exposition; that tourists spent three to four billion annually in the U.S. and every effort was to be put forth to make this event as great and interesting as was humanly possible.

Balboa park is a natural setting for this mammoth show, the older buildings have all been remodeled and rebuilt with the new structures adding great beauty to an already elaborate setting. With $704,000 pledged for temporary new construction and advertising San Diego is prepared to go ahead rapidly.

Dozens of large exhibitors are offering their resources to join in making the 1935 exposition an event that will be remembered by most of us as long as we live.

L. L. Macy of the San Diego club, Capt. W. H. Kennedy and C. D. Larkin of the La Jolla club, were visiting Kiwanians.

Ocean Beach Kiwanis Thursday of last week held an inter-club meeting with east San Diego Kiwanis. Joe Restine was chairman of the program. Dad Bingham rendered his famous "Casey at the Bat"story and Ed Hastings went briefly into the story of Arizonia, the combining of San Diego and Imperial counties with our neighboring state. The speakers time was too limited to go into great detail of the plan, however, his listeners were much interested in the benefits to be derived from a move of this nature.

WOMAN'S CLUB DENIES RUMOR

To whom it may concern:

It has come to the attention of the Ocean Beach Woman's club that an erroneous report to the effect that the club was responsible for closing the merchandise wheels in "Tich's Tavern" and other places. We wish to correct that report. We have had no part in that act and we understand that the police authorities were responsible. While we stand for civic and educational betterment of the community, however, we wish our friends to know we had nothing to do with this matter.

Respectfully
Merle L. Burne
President.

REGULAR MEETING CHAMBER COMMERCE MONDAY NIGHT

Monday night, October 8, there will be held a regular meeting of the Ocean Beach Chamber of Commerce in the woman's clubhouse.

Anyone with a feasable plan for local advancement will be welcome at this meeting.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

UNION LABOR INFURIATED BY GEN. JOHNSON — TEXTILE MILLS ARE REOPENING.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

GENERAL HUGH JOHNSON has become a live issue in the textile strike; the mill owners prepared to operate their plants under protection of state troops and of the regular army if necessary; the strike leaders flatly rejected the first peace move by the industry, declaring it was a "trial balloon," and the President's mediation board gave up the matter as a bad job.

Gen. Johnson

The NRA administrator, speaking at a meeting of code authorities in New York, charged that the textile strike was in "absolute violation" of an agreement made by the United Textile Workers with the government last June, when a strike was threatened. "If such agreements of organized labor are worth no more than this one," he added, "then that institution is not such a responsible instrumentality as can make contracts on which this country can rely."

Charging that the strike was "political" rather than for the improvement of economic conditions, General Johnson warned that you "cannot unleash the forces of riot and rebellion, because you never know when you can control them."

He declared that the strike had been called, despite the previous agreement, because Norman Thomas, Socialist leader, and others had circulated among the delegates to the union convention, telling them that the men would be fed by the government if they went on strike.

The cotton textile industry, he went on, was the last one in which a strike should be called, as increased costs under the code and the processing tax had doubled the costs of cotton goods.

To all this the union leaders, led by Vice President Woll of American Federation of Labor and F. J. Gorman, boss of the strike, asserted angrily that Johnson was not telling the truth and that his "prejudiced intrusion" into the situation was unwarranted. They demanded that the administrator resign; and in rejecting a proposal from Peter Van Horn, head of the silk institute, that the dispute be placed before the NRA and a public hearing be held, Gorman said:

"We will not join in submitting any issue to the NRA as long as General Johnson is administrator or occupies a position of determining influence in the recovery administration. We said he ought to resign and we meant it. Since that is our view, we could not join in any submission to the NRA while he has the power to make NRA decisions."

This response was characterized by Van Horn as a repudiation of President Roosevelt and the NRA machinery.

Reopening of the closed mills was expected to bring on renewal of violence and disorder, the danger points being Rhode Island, Georgia and the Carolinas. The National Guardsmen in these and other states were already mobilized and regular army troops at various points were prepared to take a hand if they should be ordered out by President Roosevelt on call of the local authorities. Fourteen persons already had been killed and the prospect was that the death roll would be lengthened.

Protests against use of National Guardsmen in the South continued. Union heads contended that at least one of the North Carolina mills operating under guard was also under citation as an NRA violator.

The executive committee of the North Carolina Socialist party said it would investigate the possibility of indicting Gov. J. C. B. Ehringhaus on charges of "inciting to riot" through his action in calling out the guard.

EFFORTS of President Roosevelt's mediation board to bring about a peaceful settlement of the textile strike failed when the employers, according to the board, refused to make any concessions that would open the way to arbitration. The strike leaders had insisted that all the mills must remain closed pending arbitration, and this was rejected by the mill owners. The cotton textile employers then declared flatly that they did not believe the issues at stake are "appropriate subjects for arbitration."

The immediate result of this breakdown in negotiations was the resumption of rioting and fighting, especially in Rhode Island. Thousands of strikers and their sympathizers fought with National Guard detachments in Saylesville and Woonsocket, driving back the greatly outnumbered soldiers. Tear gas, nausea gas and finally bullets were used to check the rioter.

CONTINUING its efforts to restore the 1929 markets for farm products of the Middle West, the State department is negotiating reciprocal trade agreements with five Central American governments—Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, San Salvador and Nicaragua. These countries used to be good customers in purchasing farm products, especially lard and wheat flour, but their imports of these commodities from the United States have fallen off from the total of $5,940,016 in 1929 to $1,692,601 in 1933.

It is the announced intention of the administration to negotiate reciprocal treaties in such a way that markets, now practically demoralized during the four-year period between 1929 and 1933, might be revived by perfecting "favored" trade schedules whereby products raised in these five Central American countries, not in competition with American products, might be admitted to this country at lower tariffs in return for admitting American products at lower schedules into the negotiating countries.

ONE of the sharpest thorns in the side of the Roosevelt administration will not be in the next congress to give pain to the New Dealers. James M. Beck of Pennsylvania, leading authority on the Constitution, has announced he will not seek re-election because congress has become "a rubber stamp." He had been renominated, but prefers not to run. However, the administration will not be relieved from his attacks, for he intends to continue them in the courts.

J. M. Beck

"I am not retiring from public life," Mr. Beck explains. "This is no time for any citizen to lessen his activities in defense of our form of government. I am retiring from congress because I believe I can help in this great cause more effectively in the federal courts, where I have practiced for more than fifty years, than in congress, where the minority is gagged and reduced to impotence.

"Our form of government can only be saved by restoration of the Republican party to power, and I hope with my pen and voice to serve that party as effectually in the ranks as in congress."

WILLIAM A. COMSTOCK lost the Democratic nomination to succeed himself as governor of Michigan, being defeated by Arthur J. Lacey. The Republicans named Frank B. Fitzgerald, now secretary of state.

In South Carolina the textile strike injected itself into the election. In a runoff election Olin D. Johnston, union sympathizer and former mill hand, won the Democratic nomination over Cole Blease, old school orator and campaigner. Johnson will succeed Gov. Ira Blackwood, hated by the union as a "strike breaking governor." Gov. Eugene Talmadge was renominated by Georgia Democrats.

In Arizona the Democrats renominated Senator Ashurst and Congressman-at-large Isabelle Greenway. The New Dealers tried to get the gubernatorial nomination in Colorado for Miss Josephine Roach, coal mine operator and social worker, but she was beaten by Edward C. Johnson, the incumbent. In Washington, also, the New Dealers lost out when J. C. Stephenson was defeated by Lewis Schwellenbach for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

THE federal government is still trying to extract a large sum of money from Andrew W. Mellon, former secretary of the treasury and ambassador to England. The bureau of internal revenue has filed with the federal board of tax appeals a brief charging that Mr. Mellon owes $3,075,103 in taxes and penalties, alleging that he intentionally defrauded the government of taxes on his 1931 income by three bogus stock sales and by failing to disclose all his 1931 income on his tax return.

Andrew Mellon

As before, the Pittsburgh millionaire retorted sharply, accusing the treasury of unfair and despotic tactics. He pointed out that two of the three stock sales which the treasury attacked as fraudulent were presented to a federal grand jury in Pittsburgh this spring by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings. The grand jury threw out the charges as unjustified and "exonerated" Mellon.

Mellon in his statement placed the responsibility for revival of the old tax charges on Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr. He dismissed the third stock transaction, which was mentioned by the treasury but which was not presented to the grand jury last spring, as "both trivial and fictitious."

MORE than 30 members of the League of Nations invited Russia to join the league and the Moscow government accepted the bid. The next things on the program were the ratification of Russia's admission by the league assembly and her election to a permanent seat on the league council.

Germany informed the league that she would not sign the proposed eastern security agreement—the "eastern Locarno"—because she could not risk the possibility of having French or Russian soldiers entering the fatherland. She, however, declared herself willing to accept an eastern agreement embodying the ideas "of collective non-aggression obligations and consultation between interested powers in periods of political crisis."

W. LAWSON LITTLE, a husky San Francisco youth, has accomplished the feat of capturing the British and American national amateur golf championships in one season. This has been done only twice before. SENATOR HUEY LONG won handily in his fight for absolute control of Louisiana, his candidates for congress, state supreme court and public service commissioner defeating those of the "old guard." The election was quite peaceful despite the predictions of bloody "civil war." The Kingfish is now expected to press his investigation of graft and corruption in the affairs of New Orleans and to undertake to have his arch enemy, Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley, ousted from office through action by the legislature, which he controls. Huey is now the virtual dictator of the state, but his opponents have not given up the fight.

FOUR members of the Du Pont family, Pierre, Irenee, Felix and Lamont, appeared before the senate munitions inquiry committee and told of the huge business the Du Pont corporation has done in supplying war material. Between 1914 and 1918 the company, which was founded in 1802 to manufacture black powder, filled $1,245,000,000 worth of war orders. In that time it did about 35 times the business it had in the year just before the World war, when its sales amounted to $36,000,000.

Irenee du Pont testified that the corporation subscribed to preferred stock in the German dye patents seized during the war by the United States. He said these patents had resulted in a "great service" to America. The corporation entered the dye business after the war as a licensee of the Chemical foundation, Du Pont said.

There did not seem to be anything very sensational or scandalous in the facts elicited from the Du Ponts, but previous witnesses had told a lot about the deals of airplane companies and other corporations with foreign nations in which it was alleged they had been aided by United States diplomats and army and navy officers. There was a lot, too, about graft on the part of South American government officials. One of the stories told brought in the name of King George of England, and this resulted in official protests by British diplomats both in Washington and in London.

AUSTRIA is thoroughly aroused by seemingly authentic reports from Brussels that former Empress Zita intends to establish her residence in Austria, along with her eight children, including Archduke Otto, pretender to the thrones of both that country and Hungary. It was asserted that this Hapsburg family had been granted permission to return as plain citizens if Otto would promise not to seek in any way to bring about restoration of the monarchy.

Archduke Otto

Quite unofficially, it is said restoration of the Hapsburg monarchy would not be opposed by either France or Italy, but the British foreign office scouted the idea. The little entente nations would be strongly against it but might not hold the Vienna government entirely responsible.

In Vienna a spokesman for the foreign office said that the return to Austria of the Hapsburg family, even as private individuals, is "still impossible."

Some member of the Hapsburg family may be allowed to return to represent the family in the long pending lawsuit over the Hapsburgs' properties, he said, but this is not likely to be Archduke Otto, because of the danger that disturbances might result from his presence. Socialists and labor unions would surely start trouble.

MEN of Great Britain have no intention or desire of engaging in any more wars except those of defense. Representatives of the London Daily Express asked in 689,301 homes this question:

"Are you in favor of Great Britain isolating itself from all foreign entanglements, treaties and understandings and refusing to engage its armed forces in any war unless our territory or that of our dominions and possessions is menaced?"

The paper announced that 606,165, or 87.9 per cent of those voting, replied "Yes." Only 13,670, or 2 per cent of those voting, favored foreign commitments. Nine and a half per cent refused to vote, and .6 per cent were indefinite.

WEARY of the continuous sabotage and assassinations by terrorists, leading business and financial men of Cuba have asked President Mendieta to approve the organization of an armed band of vigilantes. The plan is to issue permits to carry firearms to all "responsible citizens" who apply for the privilege. Those issued arms would hold authority either to arrest or shoot "terrorists." The plan has the approval of Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff.

NATIONWIDE distribution has been started on a poster pledging the public to support Blue Eagle business establishments. Four inches square, it is gummed for pasting in windows. Code authorities and local NRA committees are counted upon to aid its distribution.

This agitation is to accompany the temporary internal reorganization of the recovery administration, as decided upon by President Roosevelt and Hugh S. Johnson, the NRA administrator.

Authority is to be split three ways instead of the present one-man control. General Johnson is expected to continue in an important post. Separate agencies will be in charge of policy-framing, administration, and deciding controversies.

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY

by Vance Wynn © Public Ledger

The Case of Hannah Brown

THIS is a tragedy which began with the finding of the trunk of a body in Paddington, London, on the day after Christmas, 1836.

That ghastly thing meant nothing, and in those days there was no organized or specialized police force to run down crime.

Constable Haines went on the job, however, with all of the enthusiasm characteristic of a Nineteenth-century Sherlock Holmes.

On the following day he found a human head in the Regent's canal. Next a pair of legs were discovered and finally two arms.

All of these parts, it was found, belonged to the same person, and that person a woman.

The head was placed in alcohol, in a glass case, for purposes of identification.

It had been on exhibition for many weeks when a workman named John Gay strolled into the impromptu morgue.

His sister, Hannah Brown, had disappeared the day before Christmas, and had not been seen since.

This typical cockney took a look at the head preserved in alcohol, and then exclaimed, with true lower-class British stolidity:

"Well, I'm blowed if it ain't Hannah!"

Constable Haines then busied himself in running down the life story of Hannah Brown.

He found a man named Harry Davis who recalled the woman.

Davis said Hannah had called on him on the day before Christmas and told him that she was engaged to marry James Greenacre, who lived near Kensington.

That was a good enough clew for Haines.

He started for that neighborhood at once, and eventually located Greenacre on the Surrey side of the Thames in the parish of Camberwell.

He was living with a woman named Sarah Gale, who had a young daughter. Greenacre stoutly denied any knowledge of Hannah Brown.

He said he had never met the woman, much less promised to marry her.

But while Haines was talking to Greenacre he noticed a significant glance pass between the suspect and the woman.

He saw something else.

It was a dress the child was wearing.

The material of which this was made corresponded with the stuff they had found wrapped around the trunk of Hannah Brown when it was discovered in Paddington.

Being a very conscientious as well as a very direct person, Constable Haines arrested James Greenacre and Sarah Gale, and left the matter of their guilt to be decided by the coroner's inquest.

The coroner turned the case over to the court and the trial took place in the Old Bailey, adjoining the annex to Newgate prison.

It is interesting to note that Chief Justice Coleridge presided.

A witness appeared who testified that he had seen Greenacre going into the house of Sarah Gale with a woman on the day before Christmas.

This woman was tall and in every particular resembled Hannah Brown.

He also swore that some time afterward Greenacre left the house carrying a bulky and heavy bundle in a large, blue merino bag.

Two other witnesses testified that they had heard a quarrel going on in the house during the time Hannah Brown was there.

There was a scuffling and much noise, and finally a sound of some one dropping to the floor.

It was proved that Sarah Gale was seen scrubbing the floor immediately after Greenacre left, and detectives completed the capstone of evidence by testifying that brimstone had been used in the house for the purpose of fumigation.

Two motives were assigned for the crime.

First, jealousy on the part of Sarah Gale, and secondly, robbery, because Hannah Brown had not only been killed but robbed.

The jury convicted Greenacre, and before he was executed he confessed his guilt.

There was doubt about Sarah Gale, and she was merely transported for life.

"Myrrh"

"Myrrh" is a perennial branching herb some two feet in height with finely divided pubescent leaves and small white flowers arranged in umbells. The fruit is like a large caraway seed about an inch long; smooth but strongly ribbed. The fruit and other parts of the plant have a sweet aromatic odor that has given it the name "Myrrh." It is not the true myrrh of perfumes which is the gum of a tropical tree, Balsamedendron myrrha.

Finland Wet Land

Finland lies between continental Russia and peninsular Scandinavia. The land is not considered rich from the agricultural standpoint, 60 to 65 per cent of it being wet, poorly drained land, lakes and peat bogs. It was through the wet land that the French name, Suomi, meaning swamp, was applied to the country. It has been adopted as a national name by the Finns.

A LOVING MATE BUT POOR HOUSEKEEPER

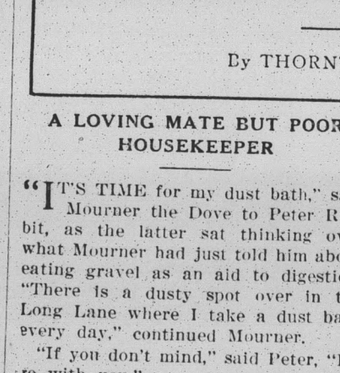
"IT'S TIME for my dust bath," said Mourner the Dove to Peter Rabbit, as the latter sat thinking over what Mourner had just told him about eating gravel as an aid to digestion. "There is a dusty spot over in the Long Lane where I take a dust bath every day," continued Mourner.

"If you don't mind," said Peter, "I'll go with you."

Mourner said he didn't mind, so Peter followed him over to the dusty place in the Long Lane. There Mourner was joined by Mrs. Mourner, who was dressed very much like him save that she did not have as beautiful a neck. While they thoroughly dusted themselves they chatted with Peter.

"I see you on the ground so much that I've often wondered if you build your nest on the ground," said Peter.

"No," replied Mourner, "Mrs. Dove builds in a tree, but usually not far above the ground. Now if you'll excuse us we must get back home. Mrs. Dove has two eggs to sit on, and while she is sitting, I like to be close at hand to keep her company and make love to her."



"Now, If You Will Excuse Us, We Must Be Getting Back Home."

The Doves shook the loose dust from their feathers and flew away. Peter watched to see where they went, but lost sight of them behind some trees, so decided to run up to the Old Orchard. There he found Jenny and Mr. Wren as busy as ever feeding that growing family of theirs. Jenny wouldn't stop an instant to gossip, Peter was so brim full of what he had found out about Mr. and Mrs. Dove that he just had to tell some one. He heard Kitty the Catbird among the bushes along the Old Stone Wall, so hurried over to look for him. As soon as he found him, Peter began to tell what he had learned about Mourner the Dove.

"That's no news, Peter," interrupted Kitty. "I know all about Mourner and his wife. They are very nice people, though I must say that Mrs. Dove is one of the poorest housekeepers I know of. I take it you never have seen her nest."

Peter shook his head. "No," said he. "I haven't. What is it like?"

Kitty the Catbird laughed. "It's about the poorest apology for a nest I know of," said he. "It is made of little sticks and mighty few of them. How they hold together is more than I can understand. I guess it is a good thing that Mrs. Dove doesn't lay more than two eggs, and it's a wonder to me that those two stay in the nest. Listen! There's Mourner's voice now. For one happy he certainly does have the mournfulest sounding voice. To hear him you'd think he was sorrowful instead of happy. It always makes me feel sad to hear him."

"That's true," replied Peter, "but I like to hear him just the same. Hello! Who's that?"

NOW IS THE TIME

NOW is the time when each fruit comes into the market to have at and a few of the delectable recipes which have waited for them. While the fresh berries are plentiful prepare hem for the winter when jellies, jams and preserves of all kinds are so much enjoyed.

Spiced Rhubarb.

Put into the preserving kettle six cupfuls of rhubarb peeled and cut into small pieces, one cupful of seeded raisins, one cupful of apple vinegar, four cupfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of clove. Bring slowly to the boiling point and let simmer until of the consistency of marmalade. Put into glasses and seal with paraffin. If the vinegar is very strong dilute it with water.

English Gooseberry Pie.

Line the side only of a deep pie dish with rich paste. Fill with one quart of ripe gooseberries which have been stemmed and cleaned, pour boiling water over the berries and drain and cool. Add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter and one-third cupful of currant jelly. Moisten the edge of the pie with cold water and spread a top crust with a few perforations in the center. Flute the rim and bake forty minutes. Serve turned upside down on a platter. Serve with hard sauce.

Baked Peaches.

Select large ripe peaches for baking. Peel, cut into halves and remove stones from the peaches. In the cavity place a seeded raisin, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of butter and a sprinkle of mace. Bake slowly in a moderate oven until the peaches are soft. Serve on rounds of sponge cake with sweetened cream.

QUESTION BOX

By ED WYNN . . . The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I read in the newspaper that a well-known shoemaker was arrested for bigamy. He has two wives. The verdict is that he must give one some money, and live with the other. Which wife do you think he'll live with, his first or second wife?

Yours truly,
MARY WONCE.

Answer: If he is a shoemaker, as you say, and if he is a good shoemaker, he will stick to his last.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

The other day I was laid flat on my back by an attack of "peritonitis." Now I am unable to work. What shall I do?

Sincerely,
N. VALID.

Answer: Report to the government at once that you have been attacked by "peritonitis." Something should be done to teach a lesson to these foreigners.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I live in a little town in which is situated the state insane asylum. They have a tower on the main building with a large clock in it, but the clock is always one or two hours too early or too late. Do you think it is proper to have a clock that isn't right in a state institution?

Yours truly,
I. M. KNUTTY.

Answer: It is perfectly proper in the case you mention. The reason they have that clock in the insane asylum is because it is not right.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I hear that Mussolini has insured the thumb on his right hand for $100,000. How can his right thumb be so valuable?

Yours truly,
I. TALIAN.

Answer: It is probably the thumb he keeps the people under.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am a girl eighteen years of age and a boy the same age is going to call on me tomorrow night. I guess I'm a little too old-fashioned for these modern boys. What I want to know is this: If he kisses me shall I scream for my family?

Yours truly,
HOPE HEESGOOD.

Answer: Not unless you want him to kiss them, too.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My uncle, a man about forty years of age, has a habit I cannot understand. Every night just before he gets into his bed he puts some money under his pillow. Can you tell me why?

Sincerely,
AL E. GATOR.

Answer: That is very simple. He puts money under his pillow so he feels that he has something to fall back on.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Can you tell me what became of the little fellow who used to sell papers at Forty-second and Broadway? I mean the little fellow with one eye named Charley.

Truly yours,
FULLER PRUNES.

Answer: Tell me the name of his other eye and I will try to find him for you.

Thank God for a Friend Like You

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THANK God for a friend like you
In bitter days!
Your handclasp is firm and true,
And staunch your ways.

Though shadows are bleak upon
The morning skies,
I glimpse the first hint of dawn
Deep in your eyes.

Thank God for a friend like you!
In joy or pain,
A bird soars into the blue!
I dream again!

Hope arches a rainbow high
In the day's design!
Thank God, as Time marches by,
You're a friend of mine!

Coal Deposits Reveal Secrets of Past Ages

Tucked away in a lump of coal are the secrets of life 250,000,000 years ago. Not only that, but the specific nature of the spores or pollen contained in the lump indicates, when examined under the microscope, the very seam to which the coal belongs. Such are the facts emerging from a microscopic investigation into the structure of coal, a work of supreme scientific importance in regard to the utilization of its by-products which Doctor Raistrick, of the department of geology at Armstrong college, Newcastle, England, has been conducting for eight years.

From his researches also, the college hopes to correlate the seams of the northern coalfields, and thus relieve collieries of expenditure incurred in mining comparatively barren fields.

The minute coal spores, from one-thousandth to two-thousandths of an inch in diameter, and perfectly preserved in their original design, afford conclusive proof that trees in the carboniferous age, when the great coal forests of the world were laid down, differed vastly from trees as we know them today. They were in the main giant clumps of rank, flowerless plants of the horse-tail or fern variety. An idea of their immensity may be gained from the fact that to produce a seam of coal two feet thick, the vegetation itself when laid down could not have been less than sixty feet thick. An occasional seam is found fifty feet deep, the product of a murky, matted forest too dense to permit animal life, which must have been a quarter of a mile high. Nowhere does vegetation today attain such monstrous proportions. This is due to the gradual cooling of the earth.

MUNITIONS INVESTIGATION

The Senatorial Munitions disclosures are bringing to public attention many facts long known to well informed citizens, but to which little thought has been given.

The startling character of what has thus far been developed has been hinted at in recent months. Definite knowledge of them of public record, it is believed, will prove to be of both national and international importance.

We have long known that our Government, outside of a few navy yards was not deeply in the munitions business, and that we have encouraged this necessary adjunct of our national defense as private enterprises. We have realized that in order to exist in peace times the manufacturers of military supplies must sell where they can find a market, at home or abroad. We have known that in war times they made large profits, though in peace times modest profits but yet enough to pay handsome dividends. It has been known to many that foreign competitive methods set up criterions that would not always align with our standards of business ethics, and that American inventive genius had contributed greatly to modern war materials and machinery. All of these things have been known to us in a general way, but we have given them little thought. We have accepted them as a necessary concomitant of a business imperative to our national defense, and which our people had little inclination or wish to transform into a publicly owned monopoly.

But what we, as American citizens, did not know was the distance this industry, as it now seems, had been carried along vicious and dangerous paths in the mad international scramble for business. It is this matter that the Nye Senatorial Investigation is bringing forcefully to our attention and that of the entire world.

By way of illustration, it was not known to the public that our Government agents were aiding in the sale of American munitions; that our naval and military commissions to foreign friendly nations were indirectly advertising and promoting the sale of our war materials; that our military secrets were pawns to be used by our munitions or submarine manufacturers in creating business; that treaties were being violated and smuggling engaged in this wildly competitive game, and that peace was being decried and war extolled when our neighbors were at each others throats.

And it is hinted from Capitol Hill that not the half of this kind of practice in the international traffic in munitions has yet been told, and that much may never be told because it might destroy the very thing this investigation is intended to promote—international peace.

Many are of the opinion that the investigation should go forward until the alleged devious methods and practices of this industry are an open book.

Next Sunday, October 7th, will be a banner-event in the observance of Sunday-school day, but the celebration proper begins on the day previous, when teachers, superintendents and pupils will march in a grand parade on the streets in various towns and cities. This idea is a new one, honoring the faithful support of teachers and the fidelity of children to their classes. Come to think of it the world membership is given as 37 million, while of this number 20 million scholars are in the United States and taught by another two million teachers. Sometimes we almost think and wonder why paid salary preachers should not take lessons from these 2,000,000 Sunday-school teachers of the land who never get any reward except the glory, for their service, yet they are the shining illustration of what is being done in holding up righteousness before the millions whom they teach. It might not be exaggerating to say that the Sunday-school teachers are more powerful peace-makers than armies with tanks, artillery and machine guns. The service clubs are to join in helping to put over the event. The growth of the Sunday school has been steady and solid since the days of Robert Raikes and his first "ragged school" in 1780. One of the best recommends today of child or adult is that they are a member of some Sunday school.

The American Cup will continue to stay at home. Sporting excitement created international tenseness during the two weeks' yachting races held between the British and United States in Atlantic waters off Newport R. I. Harold S. Vanderbilt, the "Lipton of American sports" drove the Rainbow to famous victory, against the British Endeavour, winning the majority fourth race and taking the world's championship, thus retaining the American Cup. Great Britain is the loser once more and reminds us of the "bull dog tenacity" of Sir Thomas Lipton who in his lifetime made five unsuccessful attempts to win the American cup. (years 1899-1901-1903-1920 and 1930.) He was given the name of being the most "gracious" loser in sporting history. For his courage and persistence he was awarded a gold sportsmanship cup, paid for by public subscriptions. He died the next year, 1931. America took the famous trophy from the Royals in 1851, and this race marks the 15th unsuccessful attempt to win it back.

Parent Teacher Ass'n Dad's Council Too

A meeting of the PTA will be held in the Methodist church near the school next Wednesday at 2 p. m. We especially invite all interested to come. Come even if you are not a member.

Speakers for the day are Miss Marian Evans who will talk on "Your Child and the Movie" and Miss Bradley who will explain about the activities of the Community Chest.

A preview, or partial showing of the moving picture "Grass" will be accompanied by pointers on educational advantages to be gained by seeing good moving pictures.

Mrs. Helen Parks, Mrs. Grace Leonard and Mrs. Anna Forsythe will sing a group of songs accompanied by our PTA music chairman, Mrs. Miriam Freeze, at the piano.

Re-enrollment time of memberships is from Oct. 7 to 12. Many of us will be sending our enrollment dues by the children but to those who wish to make a personal touch with us we want you to come to this meeting and see our decoration scheme which carries out the gold-fish bowl idea beautifully. The room-count may go to your child's room and the gay aquarium will be given the room having the highest number of visitors present. A neighbor may come and vote for your child's room. You are cordially invited to "get in the swim" and join our door prize march to the tea table where a social hour will give us an opportunity to visit and become better acquainted.

Watch the children's pockets for our Newsette to be sent home Tuesday next.

Our PTA is sponsoring a free dancing class to be held Saturday morning in the kindergarten building on the Ocean Beach school grounds, under leadership of Mrs. Williams, recreation chairman of ninth district. Mothers and children interested in free tap dancing are urged to come and enroll in these classes. The time is 11:30 a. m.

WARREN WALKER SCHOOL

A free period is set aside each morning for the children to exhibit and talk about things that are of general interest. Monday morning, Hilary Blake brought a few heirlooms belonging to her mother which had come from India. Among them was a beautifully decorated and engraved sword, and old-fashioned letter pouch and a jewel case studded with semi-precious native gems. Tuesday morning Patricia Welch brought an illustrated picture map of Alaska which was given her by her father. Friday morning, the kindergarten class presented a dramatization of the story "The Three Bears", Priscilla Welch led the pledge of allegiance to the flag and recited Robert Louis Stevenson's poem, "The Swing", and Jimmy Dee and Anna Helene Finn sang "Whistles".

Several of the students are interested in gardening and have spent their free moments at recesses and noons preparing the soil and planting seeds. Ruth Doggett sowed sweet peas and hopes to have them blooming in time for her mother's birthday. Jean Pope made a pansy bed, John Welch planted four o'clock plants and Bill Reynolds and William Loftus set out cactus.

The third and fourth grades have been studying shells during the nature study hour. They were able to obtain for study a mounted collection of univalve and bivalve mollusks of local specimens, which was loaned them by the Natural History Museum.

8,000,000 MORE CATTLE THAN IN YEAR 1928

The annual beef campaign—aimed to help the cattle grower by reducing surpluses and improving prices—will be held this year from October 5th to 13th, according to an announcement by Safeway, MacMarr Stores.

With prospects of exceeding last year's record movement of ten trainloads of beef, the company has placed orders both locally and thruout its territory for the finest cattle available. Supported by cattle growers' associations and having the interest of both the producer and consumer in mind, the event is expected to be one of the greatest of its kind ever accomplished.

The purpose of the campaign is threefold: first, to relieve the cattle surplus, which will remain larger than the 1928 figure, even in the face of enormous government slaughtering projects: second, to prove to the consumer that quality beef is still available in spite of the drought: third, to improve and stabilize the market for first quality beef.

According to government statistics, and allowing for the drought cattle already slaughtered, there are now approximately 65,000,000 cattle in the United States. This figure is 8.000,000 above the total in 1928, when the supply was ample to meet boom-time demands.

"There have been so many reports of cattle lost through thirst or starvation," said Mr. G. L. Rutledge, local market manager of Safeway, MacMarr Stores, "that the public may have naturally reached the conclusion that good beef is not obtainable. However, there are many fortunate stock growers who escaped the drought entirely, and their herds are of the finest quality.

"It is our intention, through the beef campaign, to make this fact known to the public," Mr. Rutledge continued. "We also want to emphasize the government's statement that none of the meat from drought-affected animals is to be sold through retail markets. Government-purchased meat is canned and labelled "Not to be Sold."

"The prosperity of the entire cattle industry, important as it is in this section of the country, we believe depends to a great extent upon the public's knowledge of the true situation. For that reason, the beef campaign this year is especially significant and we feel that the Safeway MacMarr Stores are in a position to render a splendid public service thru the benefits which will be brought to the stock grower as a result of our plans."

Local Safeway, MacMarr officials announce that shipments of the choicest beef are now ready for distribution thru the company's meat markets in this vicinity.

MARINES TO BE MAJOR FOOTBALL TEAM

The Marine football team will again be in the field with another powerful team, and will play the major schedule, as far as San Diego Football is concerned.

Most of last year's team will be back in action with the addition of several new men, who will add considerably to the team's strength.

Their schedule will open at Sports Field, Sunday afternoon, Oct. 7, when they play the Santa Ana Athletic club. The following week they will meet the Santa Barbara Athletic club, on the same field. On the night of Saturday, Oct. 20, they meet the Sierra Padre American Legion. The following week, Pomona College will journey to San Diego to meet the Marines.

Several open dates are on their schedule, and they are seeking games with State College, Olympic Club, U. S. C., Spartans and other teams. Their last year's strength proved a stumbling block for several teams. and this year the coaches are not so anxious to send their men against the "Devil Dogs".

The Marine band will be present at all of the games to entertain the visitors, and General Frederick L. Bradman is lending every possible support to the team. The Marines have done much to give San Diego their best football, during recent years, and they have received the undivided support of the fans thruout the country.

Iverson L. Harris

SPEAKER IN TEMPLE OF PEACE SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT 3

For next Sunday afternoon's forum-lecture at the International Theosophical headquarters, Point Loma, Iverson L. Harris, treasurer general and regional vice president of the society, will speak on "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." The speaker will base his thesis on a saying by one of the greatest known characters in the recorded history of the Orient, Tai-Tsong, the founder of the mighty Tang Dynasty in China, under which the Empire rose to great heights of civilization between the years 618 and 907 A. D., when Europe was asleep in the night of the Dark Ages. This great Chinaman wrote: "By using a mirror of brass, one can see to adjust one's cap: by using antiquity as a mirror, one can learn to foretell the rise and fall of empires."

The speaker will briefly trace some of the golden threads in the tapestry of history and point out how nation after nation, now in the Occident, has ridden on the crest-wave of evolution and will endeavor to draw adequate deductions from these historical facts in the light of Theosophy.

M. E. CHURCH SERVICES

"Rally Day" will be observed at the Methodist church Sunday morning beginning with a special program at 10:30 o'clock. The Sunday school will meet at 9:45 as usual, but will assemble in the auditorium for the rally day service. The program will consist of promotion exercises for the kindergarten and primary departments. The choir will sing an anthem and Mr. G. Williams of San Diego will render selections on the violin. The pastor will speak on "The Distinctive Province of Religious Education".

The service will include music by the children and the recognition of the officers and teachers of the Sunday school. A cordial invitation is extended to the parents of the children to attend. The service will close at 11:30 o'clock.

Hints for Homemakers
By Jane Rogers

SOME believe that any one who can boil water can cook corn on the cob. How many a tender ear of corn has been allowed to toughen through long keeping or faulty cooking no one will ever know. In the first place, fresh corn will not remain succulent long after it is pulled from the stalk. If you can get it in the pot the evening of the morning it was picked so much the better. Straight from the stalk to the pot is a delight that only home gardeners can enjoy.

Try this method next time you have corn on the cob. Place the ears in a large pot of boiling water to which has been added a tablespoon of granulated sugar. Young corn will cook perfectly in five minutes. More mature corn requires from eight to ten minutes. Do not salt the water as salt has a tendency to toughen corn. Sugar brings out its natural sweetness. If desired, salt the corn at the table.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes from New York to Prosperity Farm, inherited from her uncle, to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, whose health has been broken by tragedy. The second day on her farm Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, who lives at High Ledges on the neighboring farm. There is at once a mutual attraction between the two. Rod decides to stay at his home that winter, "looking after the timber." But Prudence decides to maintain a cool attitude toward him. She suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife.

"I guess your uncle thought he'd spent enough on the old house for a start. If he'd had women folks, they would have struck for it. I've got everything electric from an ice-box to a sewing machine. Don't know that it gets me any more time, though." With difficulty she extricated herself from the chair. "I must be going. When's your brother coming, dearie?"

"Just as soon as I get the house in order. It won't be but a few days now. Do you think he will like it? David and I are all that are left of the family. Mother and Father died in my debutante year. He was so much older than I that he has taken their places. He has been everything to me—since I lost my sister. Oh, Mother Puffer, you think he will get well here, don't you?"

"Get well! Never knew anyone who once settled in this village to die of anything but old age. He'll be spry and dancing at your weddin' before you have time to turn around."

"My wedding! I married!" Prudence coughed in the vain hope of counteracting the bitterness of her exclamation. "I hope Dave gets well long, long before that. Thanks heaps for everything, Mrs. Puffer. Good night! Come again soon!"

Prudence curled up in the wing-chair, confided to the fire:

"The long winter evenings! Seed catalogues for entertainment! Zowie!

"Self-pity almost caught me that time. Ingrate! Wailing over prospective long evenings, when, within my first twenty-four hours here, an all-conquering lumberman has called, and I have been snatched from a messy accident by a rich playboy."

She re-lived that episode. Shivered. Her realization of the smash from which Rodney Gerard had saved her had ripped off the shell of indifference to men in which she had encased her heart. She had actually liked him! Would she be able to harden again? Already the heavenly beauty and freshness of the place she had inherited was making life seem thrillingly worthwhile. The great spaces seemed as full of life as had the city streets crowded with pushing, dawdling humanity.

"Supper's ready, Miss Prue."

Prudence joined the woman at the door. "I'm hungry; that's why I'm low in my mind, Macky. Didn't Mother Puffer say that life could be awful dark and dreary on an empty stomach?" She linked her arm in that of the woman. "She's a dear to bring us things, and a wonderful cook."

Jane Mack sniffed. "She may be a wonderful cook, but she's a terrible talker. She said to me, 'What makes Miss Prue so bitter about men—a pretty child like her? Did her city beau turn her down because she lost her money?'"

Prudence bit her lips to steady them, blinked hard. Since the warning tap on her brother's shoulder, little hot, salty springs seemed in constant commotion behind her eyes.

Mrs. Puffer's question about the city beau returned to Prue's mind as several hours later she unclasped the string of pearls before the mirror on the chintz dressing table. She looked at the lovely, gleaming things which dripped from her pink palm. Her sister's pearls! Lovely Julie's, who had married the son of a multi-millionaire, adoring him, believing in him. When after two years of marriage she had discovered his unfaithfulness—the treachery of her brother's wife—she had crumpled, her life had gone out like a candle, and with it the life of her baby. The tragedy had seemed to run back into the very roots of Prue's heart—if one's heart had roots—or the spring of her heart which threatened so often to bubble up in tears. It had killed the lovely shining belief she had had in people, taken the sunshine out of living.

Time had eased the ache, but it had not restored her faith. She had had men friends, but she had steeled herself against their protestations. There were plenty of safe, sane interests without staking her happiness on a man.

Men. The eyes of the girl in the glass narrowed a trifle. She had met two today. Mrs. Puffer had declared:

"There's one or two smart Alecks in the village who'll do you, if they get the chance."

Prudence laid the pearls in their satin bed and snapped the case shut. She tapped the velvet lightly with a finger as she reflected aloud:

"One or two smart Alecks. I wonder—I wonder if Mrs. Puffer was warning me against one or both of my new acquaintances."

CHAPTER III

Prudence, perched on the top of a grain bin in the dusty, shadowy barn, dangled her feet in their white and brown sports shoes. She nibbled a straw as she thoughtfully regarded Si Puffer, who, seated on a milking stool opposite, gazed back at her with fatuous admiration.

"What sort of man is Len Calloway, Mr. Si? He has called on one pretext or another every day since I took possession of this property. You don't have to tell me that he is a compelling person and good-looking. I know that. His eyes are too dark and flashing, too near-set; his chin a bit too assertive; his hair is getting perilously thin on top, isn't it? Is he the whoopde-doo lad of the village? Mother Puffer said that he was born in the red brick house. Has he always lived in this town?"

Puffer rubbed an unshaven cheek. "Grew up here. Went west 'bout two years ago after he'd met with a disappointment in love. Then his father died and he came back bursting with know-how and began contracting to cut timber. What's he been saying to you?"

"He wants to buy the trees on the upper wood lot—the one Uncle Austin bought of his father. He didn't make a definite offer. He asked me to sign a contract giving him the right to cut all trees over ten inches and all wood necessary to get it out. Of course, I don't know anything about the business, but when he added that last clause the imp who regulates traffic in my mind flashed on a red light."

Puffer chortled. "You sure have your own way of saying things, Miss Prue. I guess that imp was on his job. Mind, I don't say Len would set out to cheat you, but he isn't in business for his health alone, and if you crossed him—well, don't have nothing to do with him. Then you're sure. If you like him, that's your business. All I'll say is, handsome is as handsome does. Hulloa, here's Rod! Wonder if he wants to buy timber?"

He waved his hand to Rodney Gerard, who, with a spectacular flourish and fanfare of French horn, stopped his car in front of the barn.

"Greetings, Prue of Prosperity farm! Morning, Si! Come for a ride, will you? It's a whale of a day." His eyes were on the girl.

"Terrible sorry I can't go, Roddy, but I've got to work on them poultry houses. My boss is all-fired fussy." Puffer chuckled and vanished round a corner.

Prudence took possession of the stool her man-of-all-work had vacated. She shook her head as she answered the question in Gerard's eyes.

"If that invitation was meant for me, I can't go. I'm busy. The hens are approaching the season of diminishing returns—to put it conservatively. 'High yields and large profits' must be my battle-cry. Ever heard of an economic graph? Mr. Si and I have been tracing one. You seem to forget that I am a woman of affairs. I can't waste time playing with idle little boys like you."

"All right, I'm an idle little boy. Why should I work? I don't need money; I put the best I've got into any sport I make a stab at; I like a good time and—there you are."

Prudence rested her elbows on her knees, her chin in her palms, and studied Rodney Gerard curiously from under a fringe of lashes. His clean-cut face—she reluctantly conceded that it had an underlying strength—was care-free, debonair. Her memory flashed a close-up of Len Calloway. She compared the two. Rodney Gerard was as tall as the lumberman. He gave an impression of lithe strength where the other man was massive.

"What's happened to your ambition? Arrested development? Don't you care to accomplish things?" she asked gravely.

"Some things. Do you?"

"Adore it. I love trying to do what I have to do superlatively well. I made good as a craftsman."

"What sort of craftsman?"

"Silver and gold. When people began to sneak cautiously from their financial crash-proof dugouts, began to unhoard. I earned a fairly good income making jewelry and silver boxes. Then the back-to-the-land urge caught us, turned me into a farmer—and here I am."

"Giving up your craft?"

"Not if I can possibly squeeze in time for it. I adore it. From now on I shall be an extremely busy person; Mother Puffer is about to instruct me in the thrifty art of canning. You, doubtless, will soon return to that gay circle of society in which you must be a bright and shining light."

She hadn't known that blue eyes could be flamingly black, nor that a fair skin could turn so darkly red.

"You've got that wrong. I'm an extremely busy person, too."

"You! Busy? About what?"

"Taking a medical correspondence course."

"What kind of medicine?"

"Don't look so skeptical. Perhaps it isn't medical, perhaps it's surgical. Trying to learn the remedy for hardening of the heart." There was a hint of seriousness underlying the light words. He regarded her steadily. "May be able to arrest the ossifying of yours. Is it true, as Mrs. Puffer intimates, that there's a white-haired boy in your New York stag line who's yearning to smash this farm obsession and carry you back to the city?"

Surprise hobbled Prue's voice. "W-what?"

"You know what I said. Don't sidestep."

Indignation clarified her mind and loosened her tongue.

"Side-step! Why should I? There is, there was a man for whom I might have cared, but—you have brought this on yourself by your question—he is of your type; wealth is an acid test few of the men I have known could stand—so I'm a perfectly safe person so far as you are concerned. Mr. Si told me that you were in terror for fear some girl would marry you for your money. I wouldn't marry a rich playboy if I loved him to distraction. I had to stand by helpless while my sister broke her heart over one of them."

"I Can't Waste Time Playing With Idle Little Boys Like You."

Rodney Gerard caught her hands and pulled her to her feet.

"Si talks too much. I in terror about anything? That's his joke. Your heart wouldn't break for a man, would it?"

Prudence twisted free. "Not unless it split from fury because I had been so dumb as to believe in him."

"That's one in the eye for me, I take it. Boy, but you're bitter! I'm not in that class you detest. I'll make you take back what you said about my being of that type. I'll make you. It will be a no-quarter battle. Get me?"

She clasped her hands behind her back, leaned toward him smiling.

"Smashing climax. This is where a movie director who knew his business would shout 'Cut!'"

His eyes held her mocking eyes with steady inflexibility. "Si Puffer says that you are 'smart as a steel trap.' You may be, but apparently not smart enough to distinguish between the real and melodrama. I may be a lazy devil wasting opportunity, but I still believe in character, believe that there are levels below which—well, in the century in which you belong they called it noblesse oblige."

His face was colorless as he turned away to his car. Prue's conscience smarted. Had she been unjust? She couldn't help liking him. She was beside him as he stepped into the roadster. She smiled apology.

"Don't go away angry. You asked a question. I answered it. Just because we live on different planets of ideals and ideas is no reason for our quarreling, is it?"

"How do you know we are so far apart?"

"Help! I've said the wrong thing again! I would love to motor with you, really I would, but David is coming on the afternoon train and I have heaps to do before then. You don't know how you tempt me."

There was a reckless light in Gerard's eyes.

"Quote. 'Fly pleasure and it will follow you.'"

"Then I won't fly. Will you take me to the Puffers'?"

He swung the roadster door wide. Grinned engagingly.

"Taxi, lady?"

As the car shot forward, he inquired: "Who will bring your brother from the station?"

"Mr. Si. I have been too busy about the place to try out the car Uncle Austin left me."

"The road is still torn up. He would be jolted to pulp in that old machine of Puffer's. If you think a 'rich playboy' may be trusted, I will meet him."

"Don't be snippy. I have been dreading the trip for David, but if he could come in this wonderful roadster—he is so—so precious." Emotion broke up the sentence, menaced her voice.

"I will accept your kindness only if you'll promise to come in and have tea when you bring David home."

There was a small-boy radiance in his face and voice which contracted Prue's throat.

"Mean it? Then of course I'll come. I'll drive this car as if it were a bubble with a grain of radium for passenger. Those are the most breakable and precious commodities I know. How are you, Calloway?"

The dark-eyed, dark-skinned man, passing, brought his red car to a sudden stop and swept off his broad-brimmed hat.

"Good morning, Miss Schuyler. I've just been to your place, Gerard. They told me I was likely to find you somewhere round here."

There was nothing in the words which could be challenged. It was the implication. Rodney Gerard reddened.

"Come to High Ledges tonight, Calloway, and I'll let you know what I have decided about the timber."

"Can't you tell me now?"

"No, I can't."

"Perhaps Miss Schuyler will say whether she has decided to let me have hers—or—do you decide for her?"

"You're mighty impertinent," Gerard flared, and shot the car forward.

"Oh dear! Have you made an enemy because of me?"

His laugh was curt. "The enmity between Len Calloway and yours truly is nothing new. He always gets my goat. Do you intend to sell your timber to him?"

"Mr. Si advises against it."

"Give me the contract to handle it, will you?"

"You?"

"Even I. Don't let surprise that I am interested in something besides sports shock you into insensibility. I have about a thousand acres of timber which have been on my mind for some time. I've decided to cut it this winter, and the more I have to cut, the better and more profitable job I can make of it."

"But—you'll have to live here!"

"All right. I'll have to live here. What a profound observation! Coming from a woman of affairs like yourself, it's a smash."

She stole a glance at his grave face. Her thoughts raced as swiftly as the fleecy clouds against the glaring blue sky. Had he had this in mind while she had been accusing him of indolence and indifference? Contrition warmed her voice.

"I should love to have you cut our timber, but, I warn you, I'm likely to be a pest I shall ask so many questions."

"Fire away. What say to forming a partnership?"

"Sounds grand—but that would take capital, wouldn't it? Why not sign a contract to the effect that the interest on your investment is to be paid before the profit is divided?"

"Hooey! I—"

"Unless that is done I'm off the partnership, Mr. Rodney Gerard."

"Oh, all right. I'm a lawyer—though I haven't done much at it. I'll draw a contract which will put skids under your fortune if you break it. Here we are at the Puffers'. Come on a little way. We have so much to decide, we are in business now, remember. We'll trace that economic graph you're so keen about."

Prudence swung open the door of the car. "Don't wheedle. I'll expect you for tea this afternoon. 'Morning, partner."

Emerald Said to Promote Friendship, Conquer Sin

The emerald is regarded as an emblem of success in love. Its green color is said to promote friendship and constancy of mind, while other authorities attribute to it the meaning of immortality and conquering of sin, writes an authority in the Kansas City Star.

Even in the days of Pliny this stone was highly esteemed; he wrote of emeralds: "Neither dim nor shade, nor yet the light of a candle, causes them to lose their luster."

The fresh color of emerald was supposed to be good for the eyes (bearing out modern optical opinion on the restful qualities of green), Pliny says. "There is not a gem or precious stone that so fully possesseth the eye, and yet never contenteth it with satiety. Nay, if the sight hath been wearied and dimmed by intentive poring upon anything else, the beholding of this stone doth refresh and restore it again."

The finest emeralds in the rich velvet and grass green color come from the South American republic of Colombia, the lighter green emeralds from Takawaja, Asiatic Russia, and New South Wales. Among poetical references are the lovely lines from Coleridge:

"I mark the glow-worm, as I pass,
Move with 'green radiance' through the grass,
An emerald of light."

Yesterday's Song

By THAYER WALDO

WNU Service.

"MY DEAR!" Hortense came swiftly forward to greet Lavinia, hands outstretched. "How lovely you look! You know, I'm perfectly thrilled at giving this announcement party for you. Everyone's going to consider it a brilliant match, I know. Besides, you'll make so many women envious and disappoint so many men."

Lavinia's smile seemed a trifle forced.

"Thank you," she said; "you're sweet to have thought of it. Have you—that is, do the others know?"

Hortense laughed lightly.

"Certainly not, darling! I wouldn't dream of spoiling such a dramatic surprise. I've planned to keep it until after luncheon. Do you mind?"

"Oh, no!"

Chattily Hortense went on: "I made this an affair just for women because I couldn't bear to think of all the males in Hollywood overcome by despair right here in my house. I really don't believe you know, Vin, how you've captured hearts in these last six months. Why, you've become such a radiantly different person. Is it your success in pictures, or Felix?"

"I don't know. Perhaps it's just that I've grown into the habit of acting and carry it on away from the studio, too."

After a quick glance at her, Hortense casually remarked:

"Well, whatever's the answer, you've blossomed marvelously. I remember when I first met you, how forlorn and unhappy you seemed. I realized later that was because you'd just separated from Raoul. But time heals all wounds, doesn't it?"

"Yes, I suppose it does."

"By the way," the hostess pursued, "have you ever heard from him since?"

Lavinia's golden head shook a slow negative.

"Not directly. I heard that he gave up his job to come here when I stayed, but I've never seen him; he didn't even appear at the divorce hearing."

Beyond the French windows, upon the broad lawn, were spaced a dozen or more daintily appointed tables. Soft music sounded faintly.

"Oh, how delightful!" Lavinia cried. "An orchestra, too?"

"Yes," Hortense said, leading her onto the terrace; "I thought it would be nice, and it's patriotic. They're a little group from the artists' bureau of the unemployment relief agency. Ah, there's Mrs. Fiberg; excuse me a moment, will you?"

Lavinia wasn't conscious of her going, nor of anything else in that thronged scene save the one figure she had suddenly glimpsed. There beneath the acacia tree he stood, brown hair windblown, baton moving deftly in his long fingers as he led the musicians. Raoul! Silently her lips formed the name, as a brief wave of mixed feeling swept her. Then Hortense was beside her once more, introducing someone. . . .

For the next quarter hour she had no chance even to glance in his direction. But, moving among the guests to exchange social amenities, her thoughts were constantly of him.

At last Hortense guided her to the table where they would have luncheon. It was within a few yards of Raoul and his men. She had been seated but a moment when from behind her burst forth the rich, wild strains of "Dark Eyes" played upon a violin. Her heart missed a beat, only to resume with a furious pounding that drove the hot blood into her throat and temples. He had seen her, then, for this was their love song—the one he had played that first night they spoke of love.

"Why, dear girl!" Hortense was leaning anxiously toward her. "You've scarcely eaten a morsel. Don't tell me I've been stupid enough to have things you dislike!"

Lavinia smiled, murmured something in denial, and mechanically picked up a fork. An instant more and Raoul's instrument was still.

Hortense finally suggested they go indoors for demi-tasse and liqueurs. Lavinia rose resolutely, and without a look behind started across the grass. She had heard the quiet clatter and rustle of departure among the musicians; shortly they would be gone and this fantastic interlude but a memory. Soon Raoul would be out of her life again and everyone would hear of her engagement to Felix Aaronson, the brilliant young producer. . . .

She reached the portico last; the others had all gone in. An insistent impulse gripped her and she turned. Alone by the acacia's sleek trunk was Raoul, violin yet in hand. A mask of infinite sad bitterness was upon his face. The deep gray eyes gazed toward her, brooding.

Lavinia's sob was barely audible. Over the close-trimmed turf she ran swiftly to the man beneath the tree.

* * *

Miss Prout found Hortense seated by herself in a far corner of the music room, sipping chartreuse and smoking.

"Oh, I've been looking for you!" rattled Miss Prout. "Here's the announcement you asked me to type. Will you want to read it now?"

"No," replied Hortense, smiling just a bit; "no, I shan't, Georgia. You may as well tear it up. The lady it concerns was unexpectedly called away because of—of some music—some music I took the liberty to arrange for her. She may be detained—well, indefinitely."

"Sense of Duty" Can Be Overdone

Popularity Not Gained by Over-Observance of Responsibility.

A sense of responsibility, so important to strong and fine characters, does not add to one's personal charm when paraded in social circles. Many times an onlooker can see a valued friend lose popularity because of carrying too heavy an air of duty to good times, where laughter and hilarity are more in order.

Often the person of whom this is true craves the very light-heartedness which he or she sees and which makes others loved for their gaiety.

Women who have the cares of running a home upon their shoulders cannot be expected to actually throw them to the four winds when they are "off duty." But, while harboring them mentally, they can at least subdue them to the background of their consciousness, and keep them out of their conversation. It will do them good to talk of other matters than household concerns, and it will tend to make them more interesting.

There is a certain sense of rebuke felt when someone at a social gathering acts as if the right amount of attention to certain details of the event depends entirely upon her efforts. It happens that anyone familiar with club management can detect this attitude in some member or group. Whether justly or unjustly felt, popularity declines with increase of this emphasis.

On the whole, it is an act of selfishness to lay a damper on the spirit of any party to which the "humor" is good, as they say abroad. There are persons ready to do this without any real reason, other than their desire to seem superior, and to make others appear inconsequential by comparison. A censorious nature chooses this avenue to direct attention to itself. So the really agreeable person will suffer by being thought one of these forbidding creatures, if he or she allows this atmosphere of duty before pleasure to seem to take the foreground.

Eruptions on Scalp Itched and Burned

Healed by Cuticura

"My sister's skin became itchy and, before long, sore eruptions began to appear on her face and scalp. They were red and soon began to weep. We thought she would have to have her hair cut and be bald. Her scalp itched and burned, causing her to irritate it by scratching.

"She began to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The first week the eruptions became fewer and in two weeks she was healed and no sign of her trouble can be seen." (Signed) Mrs. Emma Youska, 706 Monterey St., McKeesport, Pa., April 12, 1934.

JUST LIKE A MAN

"Is Tom conceited?"

"Very. He even imagines that he looks well in his bathing suit."

WILLING WILLIE

Weary—Say, lady, can I have one of your apples?

Farmer's Wife—Why, they won't be ripe for six weeks yet.

Weary—Dat's all right. I ain't in no hurry, I'll wait.

OH, MERCY!

"Bright! Why, that boy has seen every double-header and he hasn't given me the same excuse twice."

CAP AND BELLS

BLAME FIXED

Billy was greatly interested in his father's trapping venture. The capture of a skunk or muskrat would color his conversation for days.

Visiting his uncle, he found great amusement in arranging small clods of earth on the sidewalks where they would be trampled. Uncle attempted tactfully to reprove him.

"Why, Billy! Who made all this muss?"

"I s'pect it was a mus'rat," was the glib reply.—Indianapolis News.

At the Art Exhibit

"Well," said the puzzled 'Enry, "they didn't 'arf do it—my word—'orseback and all!"

"Rather," agreed 'Arriet, "but what are they 'awking?"

"Blowed if I know," responded 'Enry, "unless they're trying to sell their blinking parrots."—Pearson's Weekly.

No Sale

"I have here a patent door bell," said the agent, "when the button is pushed it starts a phonograph record that tells agents you don't want anything and you don't want to be bothered."

"Fine," said Mr. Grouch; "just press the button on one of them and you have my answer."

TRUE DEVOTION

"What do they say about her fiance?"

"They tell me he is very devoted, he thinks almost as much of her as she thinks of herself."

Ouch!

"I see," remarked Mr. Peck cautiously, "that a scientist says a man would be healthier if he went out more at night."

"Huh!" snorted his wife, "you try going out nights and you'll find how unhealthy I'll make it for you."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Which one?"

"I said your wife."

"Yes, but I am here for bigamy."

Frock That Makes Its Own Appeal

PATTERN 9905

Probably you are already quite prepared to pounce upon this design. It usually has that effect. If you are a woman who "budgets" and counts her pennies, we are dead certain about your frame of mind. It will be simply devastating in any of those pretty inexpensive cotton prints—and Bridget will beam on you when it goes to the laundry. Those graceful sleeve flares alone, not to mention the scalloped details, are enough to make a woman decide she cannot live without it.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Pattern 9905 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3½ yards 36-inch fabric and ¾ yard 2-inch ribbon.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER AND SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

ALL THAT IS NECESSARY

Mother — Tommy, your music teacher is coming. Have you washed your face and hands?

Phyllis (bitterly)—No, I think he must have found a girl who can see pictures in the fire!—Boston Evening Transcript.

Put Polly in a Closet!

Daughter—Mother, do you want me to put the parrot on the back porch?

Mother—Positively no. Your father is repairing the car in the back yard.

Probing

The Suitor—There isn't much I can say for myself. I'm just a plain citizen and a taxpayer.

The Sire—A taxpayer, eh? Income tax or dog tax?

Rapid Going

"How's business?"

"Better," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Shipments are so good that the only initials we need to concentrate on are f. o. b.

Naturally!

First Vacationist—This place gives me a pain.

Second Vacationist—Why, what's eating you?

First Vacationist—Mosquitoes!

DOES YOUR FAMILY TREE EXPLAIN YOUR CHARACTER?

Every mother knows that the children of a family are as different in character as the fingers on one hand—they are all from the same parents, but all vary in character and capacity. Heredity provides the tenement, but when we look at the characters in these human bodies, great inherent differences are seen.

Theosophy explains this in a most logical manner and it will be the subject under discussion at the meeting of the Ocean Beach Theosophical clug on Thursday, October 11 at 7:30 p. m. in the civic center on Abbott street. There will be short papers on the subject by various members of the group. Questions are invited and all are welcome.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." These words from I John are the Golden Text in the Lesson-Sermon on "Unreality" on Sunday in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

One of the Bible selections in the Lesson-Sermon, from Ecclesiastes, includes these verses: "Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us. . . . I have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

A passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, says: "The conceptions of mortal, erring thought must give way to the ideal of all that is perfect and eternal. Through many generations human beliefs will be attaining diviner conceptions, and the immortal and perfect model of God's creation will finally be seen as the only true conception of being."

The Loman Reporter

Tom Elliot, for years a resident of China, on Tuesday, September 25 spoke to the students and teachers of Point Loma High school for the second time in two years on affairs in the far East. Setting forth scores of concrete facts and illuminating details about China today, Mr. Elliot climaxed his talk by expressing the opinion that the most important pioneer work in the world today is in statesmanship, statesmanship connected with China, Japan, and Russia. Mr. Elliot thinks, in view of Japan's urgent need of a place for her superabundant population, that American statesmanship in foreign affairs is urgent. Envisaging a slowing arousing China, the speaker appealed to young America to understand the Chinese, Russians, and Japanese forces at work in Manchuria, a country as large as Texas and Wyoming or as France and Germany with a population of thirty million. Such definitely comparative statements as this made the speech an educational event at Point Loma High: "In one part of China where two thirds the population of the United States occupies an area the size of California there is unusual soil but very little coal, very little iron, and very little oil." By the sponsering of such a speaker, the Hi-Y of Point Loma High takes its place as a forward looking organization.

Miss Hall, school nurse, is this year offering an unusal opportunity to eighth grade girls in the new class in hygiene conducted daily to a changing class membership. Each eighth grade girl on an average of two days a month may in hygiene secure a knowledge of the human body, direction for its intelligent care, encouragement for a daily routine and for responsibility for her own health. Without being a course in physiology or anatomy, eighth grade hygiene for girls will delineate bones, muscles, nervous system, circulation, food supply and its absorption in a practical, graphic, and functional manner. This is a step in the direction of the preventive aspect of health.

Speaking of eighth grade hygiene reminds us of a new feature in the physical education work for upper class girls this year. Mrs. Dixon with archery equipment for a round dozen girls at one time promises us some nice work in archery for girls. If there is anything pleasanter to look at than a high school girl poised, with bow drawn, and string about to twang the arrow to its mark, it must be the Victory of Samothrace or Atlanta picking up the apples of Hippomenes from the race course.

Music too hath charms, and the Boys' and Girls' Glee clubs are swinging into concerted action by perfecting the year's organization. Boys' Glee officers just elected are Fred Strothe, president; Emery Bryans, secretary; and Kenneth Hait, librarian. Girs' Glee officers are Helen Burke, president; Lucille Neumont, secretary; and Betty Ballinger, librarian. Each club this year will have an enrollment of about thirty-five members.

Wilmer Joe Beerkle, Point Loma's new assistant coach has had a good deal of experience. He attended Omaha, Nebraska, Central High school and made the varsity teams in four major sports. From Omaha High, Mr. Beerkle went to the University of Nebraska, where he earned letters in track, basketball, and football.

Mr. Beerkle's first position as coach was at Santa Paula High where he stayed three years. At the end of that time he transferred to Calipatria in Imperial Valley, where he taught and coached for two years.

From Imperial Valley, Coach Breekle came to San Diego and coached three years at Memorial Junior High school.

Coach Beerkle spends his summers teaching summer school, conducting boys camps, fishing, and playing golf.
